

1. Build a platform like 'YouTube', have it download all of the recommendations for its users onto memory sticks, that will be sold for £5 (£5 a memory stick) each week and then build the algorithm to make the upload and download speeds super fast (saving customers more and more money each and every time 🕒 they use those features).

Replace 'YouTube's' ad system with a link/ payment system (if content creators want users to pay money to watch their content then, they would have to sign up for a membership account, that would only cost them £10 and then the algorithm would do the rest, also if the content creator/s wanted, they could give out discounts to subscribers that kept watching their stuff and payed a bit extra for some of the content that they preferred over the rest. This would make their channel/s grow faster and then they would be able to enter the massive cash prize, once they got to a million subscribers. (I say a million because that would mean that they have actually put in the work constantly in order to deserve the money 👛 🤪 💵 😬).

The sign up process will be completely anonymous, in the way that, to join the platform, you will have to use an Alias to hide your tracks from prying eyes and use VPNs that are not so popular with the general public, hopefully I will have a system of VPNs and a load of other software plus hardware technologies that will make anyone that is trying to spy on the platforms activity much,
