

NATIONAL SECURITY

NSA museum women and uproar

UPDATED FEBRUARY 2017

HEARD ON MORNING

Frank Langfitt

3-Minute

When facts matter most,
we've got you covered

Your donation is essential to ensuring our reporting teams in the field have the resources they need to break down stories, fact-check and deliver insights. Can you please help make this public service possible?

♥ YES, I WILL

ring ing an

TRANSCRIPT

Last week, the National Cryptologic Museum in Fort Meade, Md., papered over plaques devoted to women and people of color who served the National Security Agency. The museum uncovered the exhibits on Sunday amid an uproar from former NSA staffers.

Frank Langfitt/NPR

