Until You Can Buy Twitter, Consider Elon Musk's Stance on Patents with a Grain of Salt

SpaceX founder Elon Musk recently gave Jay Leno a tour of his Starbase spaceport, during which Leno raised the topic of patents. Musk apparently replied, "Patents are for the weak." Consistent with his previous remarks, Musk said he believes patents "are designed to prevent others from innovating," and that SpaceX does not patent its inventions. Musk is a very smart inventor and businessman, but forgive me for finding these remarks out of touch.

FEATURED PRACTICE AREA

Licensing and Monetization

Procuring intellectual property assets is not the true end goal of an effective IP strategy, but rather the beginning. The end goal of an effective IP strategy is the utilization of your IP assets to generate revenue or another competitive advantage for your business. The team at Panitch Schwarze always approaches IP with this mindset, from the initial counseling phase, through procurement, and right into the licensing and monetization phase.

FEATURED INDUSTRY

Fintech, Software and Gaming

Software programs continue to be at the forefront of innovation, whether they interface with conventional hardware components to create new and useful inventions, or whether the software itself is the sole innovation in the case of pure software inventions.
