Above, a shot of holes taken from directly above (north is up) show how circular hole (B) really is, looking more like a cavity caused by a central explosion than by debris falling on it, since the debris and the hole show little correlation. We suspect both holes are the same depth. That hole (B) seems so much shallower is probably an artifact of the additional lighting reaching it from the south.

This enlargement of a portion of a photo by Joel Meyerowitz also shows a general lack of the steel columns heavy enough to collapse a structure on the roof of WTC 5 in the region of the craters:

This further enlargement, the un-scarred roof segments overhanging the holes (arrows) suggest that the collapse originated from within:

Why are holes (A) and (B) so circular and so deep? Since no official investigation questioned the origin of these holes, their determination remains an action item for independent efforts.
